Leftist guerrillas marked last weekend with a number of bombings and machine-gun attacks, but their actions were overshadowed by killings by security forces and right-wing groups.

The guerrillas, commemorating the deaths of 17 comrades at the hands of government forces four years ago, bombed or fired on several targets in Buenos Aires, including local police and subway stations. No deaths were reported.

operations in Cordoba and Buenos Aires, but the bloodiest right-wing action was the murder of 30 people on the outskirts of the capital. The vigilantes left signs describing the victims as leftist guerrillas. The massacre apparently was in retaliation for the killing of a retired general by terrorists last week.

The massacre has disturbed the government, perhaps more than any other single such incident, and may even prompt an effort to curb the vigilantes. A ranking official in the office of the presidency told the US embassy that the government is absolutely certain who authorized the crime and has evidence to prove it. He stressed that those responsible will definitely be punished and that the embassy will be informed even if the sanctions are not made public.
